DECLARE EVELYN WORTH SAID

Boston People Reply to Gertrude Atherton Who Says, "No."

YES EVELYN THAW WORTH SAID

Gertrude Atherton says "No." What do you think about it? Gertrude Atherton says that "it does not matter if Stanford White is a hundred years old, Gertrude has a right to do as it pleases."

A number of well known editors and persons interested in the social question have replied to this challenge in the following terms of condemnation.

Ella Flagg Young, the noted superintendent of public schools of Chicago writes: "Stanford White was a genius, yes, but that does not excuse him from punishment for immorality. Morally he should have no social declaration. Is it fair to agree with nothing that Miss Atherton says in the 'Thaw case'?"

President Roosevelt has asked what their opinion was of Miss Atherton's ideas in the matter were unspoken.

Dr. Elizabeth Young of Newbury street said:

"Civilization will degenerate with all genius which is acquired at the expense of the virtue and integrity of women."

Dr. Young is a physician of wide experience and the head of a school of eugenics, in which she teaches a standard for men and women is elevated mixed classes.

Another who deprecates the double standard for such men as White and Thaw is Charles W. Hirt of the Massachusetts V. Commercial.

The position taken by Miss Atherton, said Mr. Hirtwell, "is no business, not to say absurd, that I think we must have recognized. The severity of a young girl is not necessary. It was a detriment to the character of Stanford White, and I have not the least doubt that he would agree with us."

Born with Sacred Innocence. Another member of the ecclesiastical Edwin Mulrooney, is one who has no patience with the statement of the author and declares he is only too glad to see no record as to say so. He said:

"So can I say right to believe a girl. No girl is so little that society can afford to sacrifice her. Every girl is born with a sacred innocence."

William L. de Normandie, a Boston lawyer of wide sympathy, like no patient with the double standard. He said:

"I hold that the same standard must be applied to both men and women, and I can see no reason for justifying White and condemning Thaw. I am very glad to be quoted as holding this opinion."

Particularly in Chicago have Miss Atherton's views met with a storm of protest. Mrs. Grace Wilbur Treadwell, is said to be one of the main factors in securing partial woman suffrage in Illinois, feels very strongly on the subject and made the Evelyn Thaw question the text of a denunciation of the double standard. She said:

"Coldly, cruelly, says Mrs. Treadwell, 'it is cruel, unjust and to say that the ruin of any girl is owing to the

"ONLY MADE TO BE CAST ASIDE," SAYS MRS. ATHERTON OF EVELYN

Thaw killed a man who was of some use to the community, a genius. He killed White for a girl who was only made to be cast aside when people tired of her. She was born that kind. If White had ruined the lives of ten like her, the world wouldn't have been out anything.

I hope they get Thaw back in the asylum where he belongs. For he is certainly a menace to any community. I wish people would stop connecting his degeneracy with his wealth. The money has nothing to do with it. We have degenerates in our department stores and in many other places, and why call him the mad millionaire and say he is pampered? We have many sons of rich fathers who amount to something, and Thaw never did and never could—Gertrude Atherton.

World. Evelyn Thaw was worth saving. We cannot afford to ignore the sacrifice of womanhood, even on the altar of genius.

I admit Mrs. Atherton and her mouth, but I must emphatically disagree with her. She is violating the fate of Evelyn Nesbit with the same ease, through which women have seen for centuries.

It is not easy to say that the loss of any soul, the ruin of any man or woman is nothing to the world.

Evelyn Nesbit, was and is a creature of environment, and we all are. Mentally men and women tend to the good. Evelyn Nesbit was born with all the possibilities of womanhood, but she was a victim of the double standard. When we have done away with the double standard we shall have done away with Evelyn Nesbits. I have ever so much more patience with her than I have with Stanford White.

"We cannot measure the loss to the world suffered in the making of Evelyn Nesbit. Every girl so lost is a loss to the world. Each such loss is a blow to society."

We can only be grateful for Evelyn Nesbit. We do not blame a rose for its beauty, and we do not blame a rose if its beauty brings it destruction. Evelyn Nesbit was young and beautiful. Let us not blame the rose."

Julius H. S. Pommer in the Chicago Journal-Courier dismissed Mrs. Atherton's assertions as "absurd." He said:

"She is off on a tangent. The history of countless cases of this sort have proven clearly that every woman and every girl is born with the saving, and if lost, it is worth nothing."

It should be glad if Mrs. Atherton would sit in this court through a few typical cases. Perhaps she might get a new definition of her estimate of value."

Mrs. Della Carter, superintendent of the Deafening Home, characterized Mrs. Atherton's position as "extremely uncharitable."

"These were a girl born bad," said Mrs. Carter, "and the mind can never completely vanquish the latent good. I believe that Evelyn Nesbit was born saving, and I believe that the future of the nation depends as much on the saving of womanhood as it does on the genius of its artists and architects."

"There is a reason for the misdeeds of every girl, and every girl is worth going to the rescue of."

no matter what his power, his genius, or his wealth, ought to die and go."

It has been written "Man is inhuman to man, makes relations (the social) inhuman, but more inhuman to women."

THAW CASE SPEEDED UP TO SAVE DIGNITY OF THE CANADIAN COURTS

MONTREAL, Sept. 3.—The sudden acceleration of the Harry & Thaw proceedings at Sherbrooke yesterday was undoubtedly due to the small increase in the meeting of the American Bar Association here in session here.

The presence in Canada of such famous jurists as Viscount Haldane, Lord Chatter of England, and other lawyers of international fame made the chief law officers of Canada feel no little anxious of the open house proceedings in the courtroom at Sherbrooke and the game of cat-and-mouse and shuttling that was played there since Thaw made his dramatic entry into the town as an unbidden visitor.

In plain words, the dignity of Canadian law was being outraged by the Thaw case.

So word came down from Ottawa to shift the proceedings to Sherbrooke and above Thaw out of Canada as quickly as possible.

The Dramatic Love Story of Harry Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit

CHAPTER X.

"To break words and pictures new."

(Epilogue.)

There were probably not a dozen girls along Broadway better qualified by nature—added by New York—to brighten Harry Thaw's faded eye.

One year if the metropolis had been plucked women for the girl from Pittsburg. Her natural charms had been named. Her mental qualities had been named. Her mental qualities had been named.

Her dark hair was truly a "crowning glory." It was thick and long. Unbound it fell in rippling waves nearly to her knees. It was dark, with a dull gloss that even the tortuous waves of stage makeup had not improved.

Evelyn's dark blue eyes contrasted vividly with her wavy coloring. Her complexion still held its own against late hours, grown point and the reddest glow. In the ivory-chalk of her cheeks a ruby-red old rose bespoke perfect health and the hearty spirit of a kitten.

Her eyes had a distinct "type," as artists say. It was the quality of the thinness that had appeared to Stanford White. The discriminating artist, trained to knowledge of feminine beauty, could not have tolerated a face common of uninteresting, no matter if heavily painted, any more than Harry Thaw would have tolerated a face of classic refinement, if unaccompanied by the pretensions that he revealed in.

Evelyn's eyes were unusually large, with heavy brows arching above. The long lashes outlined these eyes with tantalizing effect.

Her mouth retained its curving redness. It was a provocative, kissable mouth. Small, even, knobby teeth made her smile something to hold the gaze of men and women alike.

Dame Nature, blessed Evelyn's face with a little rounded chin. Artists went so far as to say that Evelyn Nesbit's chin might serve as a copy for Venus de Milo. Evelyn was told this, and she laughed with the frank gleam that glimmers in a real compliment.

Evelyn had acquired plenty of conventional power to carry her through Broadway friendships. Her speech was pleasing to those who sought her acquaintance for her chatter and stage reputation.

Every girl of any "mannerism" along Broadway had her little individual tricks of manner. Evelyn was no exception. She was a feminine, wife-dating back to the mists of old Chaldea—so be known by its old mannerisms or two.

Evelyn had a bit of a lip, so to call it, though it was really a slight hesitation, as if she were about to say something. The girl saw that she was smiling at this, so she thought she might as well be a little bit of a lip. It was a pretty habit. So Evelyn rather affected this lip, though she never let it get so pronounced as to seem a real effort. It made her seem a bit younger to the quizzing masculine mind.

But, more effective than the suggestion of a lip, in luring the attention of the men, was Evelyn's shy, half-appealing Broadway friendliness. Her speech was pleasing to those who sought her acquaintance for her chatter and stage reputation.

When Evelyn was asked for her mother, or father, or any well-meaning acquaintance, the child woman would resort to this reproducible, face-the-camera-in-stage-parades, Evelyn's "business of the eyes."

It was a never-failing way to escape punishment of social force. When she found that this was one—her real power that lay in those wistful eyes of hers, she was not hesitant about using it.

Evelyn's weapons of attraction were purely material. Her mental equipment followed her physical one instead of leading it. She was not a dull girl, ever, but her mental effort simply followed the lines of her own inclination.

But Does It All Pay? And Will It Endure?

ONE YEAR AGO this house issued a good deal of paper in the form of promises that certain principles would be upheld. Today we call that paper in for redemption. There must be a reckoning. You, the public, are entitled to know how you stand on our Book of Service.

COMMERCIAL circles the world over have been watching the evolution of Filene methods and principles as applied under the enlarged scope of the new store.

Even from our most ardent supporters have come questions such as these:

Can a store of this size—a store whose organization represents the best talent procurable in each and every unit—limit its trade virtually to made-ready apparel?

Is the separate shop idea feasible when carried to such extremes?

Are we justified in devoting so much valuable space to interior streets, their windows filled with an ever-changing style exhibit?

Is it good business or merely Utopian dreaming for us to nurture our producing sources as we do—striving to keep them clean of labor-slavery, eliminating sham and shoddy, seeing to it that industrial sunshine permeates producing source and product?

Sounds like theory. So did the description of the "works" of the first clock that kept right time.

But the clock ticks on. And the world gets up and goes to bed at its best.

BUT WHAT of the many unusual store conditions, physical and ethical?

Every employee is put upon a self-respecting basis; first by highest possible remuneration, then by maintenance of individual rights through an organization possessing extraordinary powers.

During July and August Saturdays have been holidays; this in addition to the regular Summer vacations always allowed.

A competent staff devotes its energies exclusively to looking after the comfort and welfare of all who may require such personal service.

Supplementing the many public utilities such as telegraph, telephone, theatre and baseball ticket offices, railway and steamship transportation agencies, is a Marconi wireless station, the only one within easy reach of Bostonians.

Gratuities are prohibited in restaurants and barber shops.

Does it all pay? Will it endure?

TO ALL of these questions we emphatically answer YES.

These methods of serving our public pay because they are integral parts of a broad business system that pays. They will endure because the business of which they are essential parts will endure. After one year's test we find no reason for their elimination or radical modification.

They spell scientific specialization—the doing of a limited number of things broadly.

Without them it would be impossible to maintain these basic principles of the Filene store:

Right relations with those who make up our organization.

SUMMING UP, this is a human-interest store—a place women and children and men look upon as store home—a place holding a good deal other than mere merchandise and little that is not heart.

Queer business? Good business!

THIS IS SECOND of a series of three advertisements relative to the anniversary of the opening of the new Filene store. The third will appear tomorrow. Next Sunday we shall announce the ANNIVERSARY SALE, to be held next Monday. That will be a whole-store event of exceptional economic interest.

ARTIST COURTS ARREST IN 'WAR' AT MARBLEHEAD

Marblehead is today waiting the arrival of the light between Herman to Marbury, a well known Boston artist, and property owners at Marblehead Neck as to whether an artist has the right to paint on the beach below high water mark or is forced to stand in the water to secure a view for his canvas. Artist Marbury is ready to court arrest in order to make a test case.

The opening act in the unique war was filed by Robert C. Bridge, who owns practically all of the Neck, including the beach, waterfront property and streets. He ordered Marbury, Walter R. Perry of the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, Mr. Pratt and George C. Moore, another artist, of the beach where they were painting a view of Marblehead. Artist Marbury has placed his easel in the hands of Attorney Philip E. Joslin, and the local battle is expected to extend back to the date property deeds were issued to the Salem, Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay Colonies.

The life was out when Artist Marbury and the other members of his party were sketching on the beach and they were less than high water mark. They had previously been ordered off the beach by an unnamed cottage by Mrs. Paul B. Bickart, daughter of Robert C. Bridge, the owner.

MISS MAUDE A. TAYLOR, eighteen-year-old Dorchester girl, who is engaged to Jeweller George H. Caldwell of seventy-five years, who has already had three wives.

George H. Caldwell, seventy-five years old, wealthy retired Jeweller, living in the Marlborough Hall, whose engagement to Miss Maude A. Taylor, eighteen of No. 102 Blue Hill avenue, was recently announced, declared today that, despite any objections by relatives he would stand within two weeks on his fourth matrimonial venture.

"Miss Taylor is a virgin, and I am not old enough to get married without waiting for anyone's consent," said the new bridegroom, whose looks belie his years. "So you should see what a good fellow I am."

"I guess I know the feelings of my age," said Maude, who is the daughter of a well-to-do family, in the parlance of the day, "we should marry."

"I can't tell you the exact date of our marriage, as it will be very shortly. You see, I have contemplated matrimony for some time, and when I met Miss Taylor, I felt she was just the girl for me. I met her two months ago, and she seemed to like me very much. When I proposed the question, the marriage talk, as you say, was not my portion."

We will go away for a long honeymoon, maybe to my automobile, for I really like the automobile, and so does Maude. And we will take in all the shows wherever we go, for the theatre is my second choice in the amusement line.

'STEEL CARS SAVE LIVES, WOODEN ONES FAIL,' SAYS M'CHORD

"Wooden lives have been lost in the New Haven wreck if the Pullman cars had been of the latest type of all-steel construction, instead of the antiquated wooden cars," says M'Chord.

Answering this question, experts of the Interstate Commerce Commission said today that the Pullman cars had been of the latest type of all-steel construction, instead of the antiquated wooden cars.

In the Tyrone wreck we have almost a duplicate of the disaster at North Haven, Conn. Going at the rate of forty miles an hour, a train smashed into the rear and side of a train which was just leaving the station.

"This, in the opinion of Commissioner McChord of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is a striking commentary on the value of the steel car."

Murder as an Adjunct to Monopoly

On June 17 last, the Boston AMERICAN published an editorial signed by William Randolph Hearst dealing with the policy of the New Haven Railroad, in the course of which he said:

Is there in this whole country a more dangerous and destructive institution than this New York & New Haven monopoly, which makes money out of plunder and murder and uses it to undermine the very foundations of government and society?

Is there any punishment inflicted upon individual criminals that is too great to inflict upon this collective criminal, or upon the individuals responsible for this collective criminality?

Is there any motive which inspires the individual criminal which is meaner than the mercenary motive which inspires this collective criminality?

Is there any consequence of individual crime which is more menacing to society, to law and order and to respect for law and order, to property rights and to human rights, than the consequences of the collective crime of the New York & New Haven Railroad?

If an individual steals, he is sent to jail. What has happened to the individuals who are responsible for the plunder of the public in the conduct of the New York & New Haven Railroad?

If an individual bribes, he is pilloried and imprisoned. What has happened to the individuals who are responsible for the habitual political debauchery of the New York & New Haven Railroad?

If an individual kills, he is hanged. What has become of the individuals who are responsible for the continual killings on the New York & New Haven Railroad?

Is punishment to be meted out only to the little—is immunity to be extended always to the great?

Is there to be forever in this alleged Republic of ours large punishment for small crimes and no punishment for large crimes?

Gertrude Atherton---We Regret to Say It---Talks Very Much Like the White Slave Dealers

Since Her Views Are Published Widely, It Is a Painful Duty to Tell Her That What She Says Is Worthy of the Woman That Used to Traffic in Girls for Stanford White's Benefit.

Copyright, 1913, by N. H. G. Co.

Gertrude Atherton, good and intelligent woman, has offended decency and the public welfare in one of many attempts to "extract attention and be different."

She praises Stanford White, who was as vile a brute as ever disgraced the human race, and permits herself to publish the statement that White was justified in raising the life and character of an unfortunate girl.

This is what Mrs. Atherton says of White:

"He (White) killed a man who was of some use to the community. He killed him for a girl who was only made to be cast aside when people tired of her. She was born that kind. If White had ruined the lives of ten like her the world wouldn't have been out anything. I hope they get Thaw back in the asylum, where he belongs, for he is certainly a menace in any community."

That statement is disgraceful, criminal and worthy of a thoroughly bad and unprincipled woman.

No girl was ever made to be "cast aside when people tired of her," and to publish the contrary is to encourage vice.

To say, as Mrs. Atherton says of Evelyn Thaw, "if White had raised the lives of ten like her the world wouldn't have been out anything," is criminal and shameful.

In talking thus, Mrs. Atherton, you talk just as the women talk who provide unhappy girls for such vile beasts as Stanford White. You furnish them and men like White with the excuse they seek.

The woman who for pay ruins the lives of perhaps a dozen girls is not as harmful as the woman of intelligence who would excuse such an act.

We beg to tell Gertrude Atherton that if Evelyn Nesbit had been treated decently and kindly instead of falling into the hands of White and of a woman who thought "ten like her were nothing," she might have been as good a woman as Gertrude Atherton, or better.

And if Gertrude Atherton had fallen into the hands of Stanford White through some vile woman who thought some girls were "only made to be cast aside when people tired of them," then Gertrude Atherton would have been all that Evelyn Thaw has been, and might be less of a woman today.

No fewer is made to be cast into the manure pit. No girl is made to be cast aside by such a degraded brute as Stanford White. No woman possessing a thin shred of self-respect should write as Gertrude Atherton has written. And this newspaper will give to frank criticism of her opinions as wide publicity as she has given to the infamous statement that a man of genius—whom White never was—had the right to destroy the body and spirit of any woman.

As for Thaw, if sane, he should have been punished for murder. No provocation justifies killing.

Why We Should Stop Capital Punishment—It Forces Men to Kill Other Human Beings and So Brutalizes Them.

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by the Best Company.

THE State of New York, the former Superintendent of Prison, Joseph F. Scott, once superintendent of Elmira Reformatory, has said in his current report:

"I believe that capital punishment should be abolished as a relic of barbarism. Its deterrent effect is greatly overestimated and materially reduces the number of convictions. But if it is to be the continued policy of the State, there should be erected a prison, removed from the State prisons, centrally and suitably located and devoted solely to this purpose." Warden Hoyt of San Quentin Prison, California, says:

"I think it is generally believed that the death penalty has not materially lessened the number of murders committed in this State."

Former Governor Dix of New York has written: "I am opposed to capital punishment. It is one of the remnants of the Biblical injunction, 'A life for a life, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, and a hand for a hand.' We have done away with all of these except the 'life for a life' and believe that society through the process of law should take a life for a life. To my mind the real punishment will come if the capital cases are segregated in a prison by themselves, cut off from the rest of the world, and upon convictions no interference with the sentence shall prevail."

The leading criminologist in this country is probably Charles R. Henderson of the University of Chicago. He is the American representative of the International Prison Commission, composed of representatives of all civilized nations. Doctor Henderson puts his reasons thus:

"1. An appeal to capital punishment becomes—

"2. Not needed for the protection of society.

"3. Occasionally is inflicted on the guilty.

"4. Is irreparable.

"5. Tends to increase brutality and murder.

"6. Diverts attention from preventive measures.

All these reasons are good reasons for doing away with capital punishment. But there are two other reasons:

"Capital punishment creates a legalized class of murderers.

"It forces men to kill other human beings.

No matter whether it killing is done by the gallows, the hangman's rope or the electric chair, it is taking the life of a fellow being into human hands and destroying it, and this most heinous and hardened the nature of the men who perform this act. It must produce an unimpaired effect on the minds of the people to take away life, no matter how dangerous that life may be to the world.

But there is still another reason.

It delays the progress of the soul while it endures the ordeal of earth.

Pay better for them and for us that they be given life terms, and allowed an opportunity to think and grow, through labor and right instruction, that their minds may reach up and out, however feeble, toward the light before them die.

Solidly confident that capital punishment should be abolished with capital punishment.

Every soul finds time enough to meditate at night, and it would be given wholesome, constructive hours during the days and nights of this work should be in the open, where nature can preach her wonderful sermon to the erring in voices of the winds and songs of the birds, and where wholesome and holy aspirations may arise.

The way to drive out darkness is to let in light.

Light does not come to the darkest criminal mind through death in the electric chair.

The eyes must be taught to see before they can discern light.

If insane when he killed White, and sane now, he should be set free.

Sane or insane, he will be remembered, at least, as one who did much to discourage the Gertrude Atherton theory that one miserable girl, more or less, amounts to nothing. Thaw killed one of the worst of enemies of society.

Thaw, crazy or sane, made several men realize that Evelyn Thaw and ten like her" do amount to something.

The white slave trials in California are making others realize that girls are not made "only to cast aside when people tire of them."

We invite Gertrude Atherton to amend her views on the importance of a helpless, unhappy girl, "or ten like her," as compared with the enormous pleasures of a degenerate man. We may feel sorry for the Chinese mother who throws her amorous daughters into the water. But it is not sorrow we feel toward the woman who declares that it "wouldn't have been anything" to treat ten girls as White treated his victims.

To advocate or palliate a crime is wholesale criminality.
